The Netherlands: Amplify your innovation for global impact

The Netherlands has a long tradition of innovation and collaboration. Inventors of Wi-Fi, Bluetooth, the electrocardiogram and Python, the Netherlands is a hotbed for R&D. Some of the world's most cutting-edge innovations take place here, from both home-grown companies such as ASML and Adyen, and foreign investors such as Genmab and Nestle. It is no coincidence that the EU Innovation Scoreboard and the Global Innovation Index both rank our country as innovation leader in Europe.

The Netherlands' innovation-friendly business climate offers broad opportunities for companies, including attractive incentives. For example, the Dutch government is investing in innovation within the key sectors in the Netherlands through its National Growth Fund. By embracing innovation, the Netherlands continues to attract the world's leading businesses.

Make more impactful change when working together

Companies also look to the Netherlands to benefit from the public-private partnerships between the private sector, research universities and government. This characteristically Dutch 'triple helix' approach drives future-forward applications related to everything from agrifood and financial services to quantum technology. The Netherlands invests significantly in digital and physical infrastructure as well as an extensive network of science & innovation campuses that help new technologies come to life. By connecting knowledge, expertise, experience and innovations from all over the world in a nurturing business environment we enable sustainable economic growth.

Join our strong innovation-driven ecosystems

Dutch industry sectors are strongly focused on creating solutions for global challenges and transitions. Our key sectors are agrifood, life sciences & health, high-tech systems, chemicals, clean energy, IT, fintech, creative industries and maritime and water technology. Paving the way for a healthier future

The Netherlands is an undeniable powerhouse for agriculture and food innovation. As the world's second largest exporter of agricultural products and a leading innovator in agrifood technology, the Netherlands is helping to shape the global food system of the future. That's why major international agrifood companies choose to innovate in the Dutch ecosystem, including Nestlé, Cargill, Beyond Meat and Kraft Heinz.

The Netherlands is also making vital impact on global life sciences and health. As a highly-connected European hub for life sciences, and home to the European Medicines Agency (EMA), the Netherlands draws international companies that are innovating health and care solutions for healthy societies of the future, including Genmab, Kite, Astra Zeneca, Amgen and Thermo Fisher.

Pioneering for a green, clean environment

The transition to renewable and smart energy is coming to life in the Netherlands thanks to its world-class R&D facilities and innovation incentives. Energy companies, knowledge institutions, industry clusters and government all work together to power innovation, from green hydrogen and battery technology to smart grids. Likewise, the chemicals industry is helping to shape a more sustainable society by engineering the materials and processes for a circular economy. While the high tech sector is innovating state-of-the-art technology for smart mobility and living. Underpinning the innovation in the Dutch ecosystems is the superb connectivity of the Netherlands' IT and logistics sectors.

“The Netherlands gives us more than market access; it gives us an opportunity to innovate, learn from and engage with other entrepreneurs, universities, the government and so on. It's a perfect ecosystem for us to grow in.”
